

Start creating on the Commons

You can use the Commons to create Groups, Sites, or a Group + Site linked together.

Groups

Groups offer a shared community space with discussion forums, document and file repositories, and email communication options. Groups can be public, private, or hidden.

Key Benefits:

- Host forum discussions
- Post and share files
- Email all members and receive notifications of group activity
- Create shared documents
- Share an internal calendar

Frequent uses for Groups include connecting people across CUNY based on shared interests, collaborating with colleagues, hosting private files, and using a discussion forum as a listserv.

Create a Group

Sites

Sites are flexible, extensible websites that can be tailored to specific needs. Sites can be private, visible to Commons members only, or public on the open web.

Key Benefits:

- Host a WordPress site with a customizable interface
- Create dynamic blog posts with links, images, and video
- Extend site features through a range of available plugins

Frequent uses for sites include teaching a class that integrates student writing, creating a public-facing website for an event or program, developing an open educational resource, and building an online portfolio.

Create a Site

Connected Group + Site

Groups and Sites can be connected, allowing users to match the communication options of a group with the flexibility offered through a site. Privacy options for each space can be set separately.

Key Benefits:

- Connect and integrate public and private spaces
- Sync membership across connected Groups and Sites
- Send email notification of Site posts
- Email all members at once

Frequent uses of connected Groups + Sites include courses with Sites that feature public writing and connected Groups that support private discussion, or public Sites for conferences and connected public Groups to build community around the event.

Site Layout

The Site Layout tool is designed to make the process of creating a Commons site a little easier by helping you choose a design and a collection of plugins that correspond to the purpose of your new site. The following layouts have been suggested by previous Commons users based on their experience.

Your new site will be configured to match the layout you choose below. These configurations are defaults only; they can be changed after your site has been created.

☒ Default Template

Default Template demo (link will open in a new window)

The Blog layout is the default and provides a basic design for getting started with a website that features regular posts and content updates. It's a popular design for blogging, reflecting on scholarly work, or sharing regular news updates.

No plugin packages are included.

☐ Teaching Template

Teaching Template demo (link will open in a new window)

The Teaching Template launches a WordPress site with a default theme that is preconfigured to meet common needs of those who teach courses. The preloaded menu links to a Home page, Syllabus page and Course Schedule page, as well as categories for Announcements, Resources, and other posts. It also has a set of widgets added to the sidebar and our Teaching Plugin Package preactivated. Learn more about the Teaching Plugins Package (link opens in new window).

You can change the theme of your site without losing content, but you may have to reconfigure the menu and widgets.

☐ Academic Portfolio Template

Academic Portfolio Template demo (link will open in a new window)

The Academic Portfolio Template launches a WordPress site pre-configured to present the work of a scholar and teacher. It contains an editable Home Page, CV Page, Research Page(s), Teaching Page, Service Page, and default blog category of "News." Select this template if you want to show off your work.
