Description
It looks to me like the default text on group pages is a light gray that is hard to read against the white background. Do you find this hard to read, too? If so, can you update the stylesheet to a darker shade of gray, maybe #999999

Let me clarify: it's the text color that appears in the group description. Text in other parts of the group page looks fine.

here's an example: <http://commons.gc.cuny.edu/groups/digital-humanities-initiative/home/>

#999999 is only one step away from #AAAAAA and the difference was hardly noticeable, so I made it darker still. Please check on cdev.

Text color looks good on the group descriptions. The text on the timestamp next to activity stream items is too light, though -- I'd make it the same as the "posted an update in" text. Let me know if you want a screenshot.

and thanks!

It is the same color as the "posted an update in" text. Might not look that way because of the yellow background.

I made it darker. See what you think on cdev.

Sorry for the confusion - I was talking about the timestamp on activity stream updates. Please see the red circle on the attached screenshot.

In that case, I'm going to disagree with you. Making it darker means making everything in an activity update nearly the same color. The timestamp is a relatively unimportant piece of metadata that should remain unseen unless you're looking for it.

Hmmm. I don't agree, but let's leave things as they are. If anyone complains, we'll revisit the issue.
