I'll make the request of IT. They will have to set things up on their host.

Hi,

We've pointed the domain name (murphyinstituteblog.org) to the Academic Commons nameservers. What's our next step?

Thanks,
Leah

Hi Leah -- we need to wait for the Grad Center's IT department to set up the domain mapping the server. I am hopeful that that will happen today, and I will notify you when I hear something.

Actually, IT reports that this was done.

Thanks, all. The mapping is complete: <http://murphyinstituteblog.org/>

Leah's original request had a typo - muphyinstituteblog.org instead of murphyinstituteblog.org . Many thanks to Scott for catching that. I have asked IT to update the server.

Thanks all!

I'd assumed that it was a typo, too. It appears that IT assumed this as well, because the mapping is working as expected. <http://murphyinstituteblog.org/> I think this issue is resolved.

Awesome

Thanks Boone - but just one question - when you click on murphyinstituteblog.org, shouldn't the url change to murphyinstituteblog.commons.gc.cuny.edu/? I thought that is the way the other ones work - but I might be wrong.

when you click on murphyinstituteblog.org, shouldn't the url change to murphyinstituteblog.commons.gc.cuny.edu/?

Nope. The purpose of mapping the domains is so that you can use your custom domain for all URLs. A simple redirect wouldn't require a mapping plugin (and is something that users can set up themselves at their registrars, without submitting a request to us.)
