Description
in the attached screenshot, the hight of the top nav bar does not quite match the user listing. It looks like we have some custom user css there (please see attached); can you please help me set up the padding correctly?

I'm not sure what style on your site was causing this - I don't see any custom styles that would have done it - but I added the following, which seems to have resolved the problem:

body #wpadminbar > div.quicklinks > ul > li a {
    height: auto;
}
```

Please reopen if it's not looking right.
